Here are the top issues and events in Washington, D.C., for this week:

1. CONGRESS. The Senate is in session this week, while the House is out until Nov. 8. The Senate failed on a 49-50 vote (60 votes were needed) last week to move forward on the CLARITY Act, which would have created a federal regulatory framework for the cryptocurrency industry. This week, it will continue debate on a bill to regulate college athletes' "name, image, and likeness" (NIL) rights. On Wednesday, the Senate Judiciary's Crime Subcommittee held a hearing on Flock cameras' AI surveillance network.

2. EXECUTIVE BRANCH. The President returned to the White House on Saturday evening, rather than Sunday, following State Department warnings about rapid escalations between Saudi forces and Houthis rebels in Yemen. On Monday, he was in New York City, where he met with Mayor Mamdani and French President Macron. On Tuesday, he spoke at the United Nations General Assembly. On Thursday, the President hosted a state dinner for Chinese President Xi Jinping at the White House and — per ABC News — was at Joint Base Andrews to meet Xi's plane. Last Saturday, he announced plans to create a new AI "czar" at the White House and a new agency known as the "AI Force." Last Friday, a 3-judge panel on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 1st Circuit unanimously upheld a lower court judge's decision that the Department of Homeland Security's policy, which has to date deported

25,000 immigrants to third countries, is unlawful. Last Saturday, the White House Correspondents Association called on the White House to restore the credentials of journalists from CNN, MSNOW, and Politico, who were banned from the White House by the President on Friday.

3. SUPREME COURT.

Last Monday, the Supreme Court declined to allow the U.S. Postal Service to implement parts of a new rule restricting mail-in voting. In a brief, unsigned order, the justices left in place a federal judge's Boston ruling that bars the USPS from implementing aspects of the rule. In related news, the Supreme Court is considering a White House petition to stay a federal judge's Washington, D.C., ruling that bars the federal government from using a Department of Homeland Security database to verify voters' citizenship.

4. MID-TERM ELECTIONS. There are about 40 days until the Mid-Term Elections. Early in-person voting for the Mid-Terms began last Friday in ID, MN, SD, and VA, while 20 states have already begun mailing ballots to voters, including MI, TX, and NC. Last week, the widely followed Cook Political Report moved the NH open Senate seat from "lean D" to the "toss-up" column, joining MI as the other toss-up race currently in Democratic hands. The Senate GOP has 5 toss-up races: AK, IA, ME, OH, and TX (with the GOP open seat in NC rated as "lean D"). Democrats must net 4 seats to take control of the Senate. Cook's rating of the House remains at 21 toss-ups (16 Rs and 5 Ds) — Democrats need a net of 3 seats to take control.

5. EDUCATION GRANTS.

The Education Department's proposed update to its grant regulations (EDGAR), open for public comment through Wednesday, September 23, would allow the agency to terminate competitive grants to schools and colleges "for convenience," significantly expanding its discretion to cancel awards. The proposal would also condition major formula funding streams, including roughly $18 billion for Title I, $15 billion for IDEA, and $1.5 billion for career and technical education, on states and their subgrantees complying with executive orders.

The department says the changes will keep projects aligned with its priorities and grantees accountable, while critics warn they would politicize federal grants and discourage institutions, particularly under-resourced colleges, from applying. The rule mirrors a similar OMB proposal that Congress has temporarily blocked through December 11 amid bipartisan concern from appropriators, including Senate Appropriations Chair Susan Collins. Separately, the White House is reportedly weighing an executive order to create a politically appointed board with authority over NIH grant decisions, signaling broader efforts to centralize control of federal research and education funding.

Metropolitan SDA Center Celebrates 14th Anniversary

Metropolitan 7th Day Community Worship Center, 1116 Church Street Northwest Huntsville, celebrated its 14th anniversary at 11 a.m., on Saturday, September 19, featuring the theme, "We've Come This Far By Faith," noted Senior Pastor Reuben Griffin, Jr.

In 2011, founding pastor Bertram Wright and wife, First Lady Elizabeth Wright, while employed at Alabama A&M University and Oakwood University, respectively, established this congregation that, according to <https://metropolitan7thdaycomm.org/>, "has been serving the local community for over 12 years. Our humble beginnings started in a small church, but we have since grown to become a spiritual leading organization in our calling and community."

The Valley Weekly columnist, leadership strategist and Amazon best-selling author Tim Allston (above) was scheduled as the anniversary speaker, accompanied by his wife, soloist Ms. Virginia "Ginger" Allston.

Making Impact & Building Legacy

KAREN STANLEY

Legacy is not simply what we inherit. It is what we do with what has been entrusted to us—and how we use our gifts, opportunities and influence to make life better for others. Karen Stanley is doing just that.

A Huntsville native, Karen is part of a family whose business roots run deep in our community. As Vice President of Finance for Stanley Construction Company, founded by her late father, Thornton Stanley, she has helped carry forward a successful African American family business that has been part of North Alabama’s economic landscape for more than six decades.

tell a story of excellence, discipline and determination.

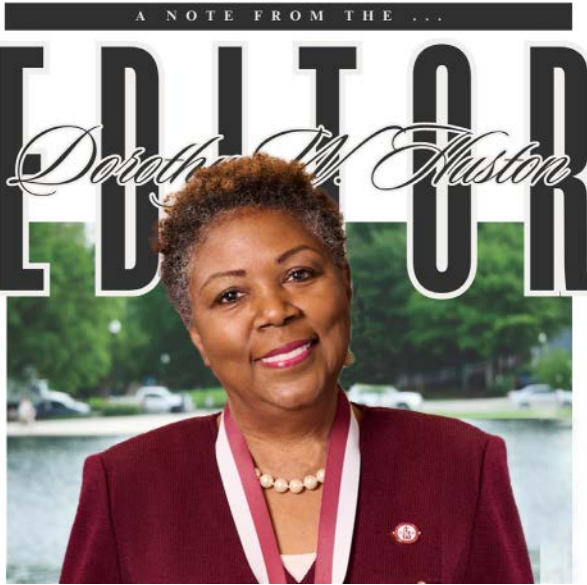

But degrees and titles do not define legacy—service does. Karen has invested her leadership in Huntsville and beyond through business

Karen’s educational journey is equally impressive. She graduated magna cum laude from Vanderbilt University with a degree in chemical engineering, earned a master’s degree in chemical engineering from MIT, and later received her MBA from Harvard Business School. Those accomplishments alone development, conservation, education, philanthropy and civic engagement. Her service has included leadership with the Huntsville/Madison County Chamber, the Huntsville-Madison County Convention & Visitors Bureau, the Land Trust of North Alabama and Alabama’s Forever Wild Land Trust.

She has also provided leadership through Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., and the Harvard Business School alumni community.

What stands out most is her commitment to using her success to help others succeed. Through philanthropy, scholarships, community service and advocacy for small businesses, Karen has demonstrated that achievement carries with it a responsibility to reach back and lift others.

At a time when our community is experiencing tremendous growth, we need leaders who understand that progress must include everyone.

We need people who can sit at influential tables—and remember to make room for others. Karen Stanley is one of those people.

She inherited a proud family legacy, but she has not simply preserved it. She is adding her own chapter—one built upon excellence, service, generosity and community.

That is making impact. That is building legacy.

And that is a story worth telling.

Until next week ...

Today's Spiritual Game Plan: "The Certainty of Hope"

Genesis 4:3–5 says, "In the course of time Cain brought some of the fruits of the soil as an offering to the Lord. And Abel brought an offering, fat portions from some of the firstborn of his flock. The Lord looked with favor on Abel and his offering. But on Cain and his offering, he did not look with favor."

When I played professional football, we were judged by our talents, our strength, our size, and our speed. But God doesn't look at us that way. God looks at our hearts, and He looks at our desire to please Him. As we see here in this scripture, Abel had a greater desire to please God than Cain did. So my question is, do we only desire God to answer prayers for our lives, or do we desire to please Him? So often we want God to answer our prayers, but we don't honor our commitments that we make to God. For example, we may say that we are going to study the word more or pray more or give more, but we never follow through with these promises. So I pray that God gives each and every one of us a more dedicated heart so that we can be more obedient and committed to what He wants us to do.

Prayer: Merciful God, give us a clean heart so that we can better serve you.

Question: Do you feel that you have a desire to please God? If so, what are you doing on a daily basis to accomplish this?

LEADERS: Learn to Say, “That’s Mine!”

Former Republican Congresswoman Marjorie Taylor Greene recently offered an extraordinary leadership confession.

Reflecting on her years as one of President Donald Trump’s strongest MAGA supporters, Greene said Republicans had essentially been trained to do two things: never apologize or admit when they were wrong, and keep fighting their enemies.

Then Greene did something leaders sometimes find extraordinarily difficult.

She reconsidered.

“As a Christian, I don’t believe in doing that,” she said.

Regardless of our politics, there is a leadership lesson here.

T-O-P

For years, I have taught a simple three-part process that I call

T-O-P:

T — Target the problem.

O — Own the problem.

P — Proceed to correct the problem. The middle step may be the hardest.

Own it.

Before we can correct a problem, we must first acknowledge our contribution to it.

That applies in Washington, but it also applies around the kitchen table.

It applies in marriages. It applies between parents and children.

It applies in churches, boardrooms, classrooms and community organizations.

And yes, it applies to me.

One of the most important sentences emerging leaders can learn to say is:

“That’s mine.”

I said it. I did it. I contributed to it. I was wrong. Now, what can I do to help correct it?

The Blame Game

Unfortunately, too many of us have mastered another leadership strategy: the blame game.

When something goes wrong, we immediately search for someone or something else to blame.

My boss. My employees. My spouse. My children. The economy. The Democrats. The Republicans. The President. Everybody—except the person staring back at us in the mirror.

That is why T-O-P cannot become T-B-P: Target. Blame. Proceed.

Blame may make us feel better temporarily, but it rarely makes us better permanently.

And perhaps that is what makes Greene’s admission worth examining. Whatever one thinks of her politics or her previous conduct, she appears willing to reconsider something she once embraced.

That is not weakness. That is potentially growth.

As November’s midterm elections approach, Republicans and Democrats will undoubtedly spend millions telling Americans what is wrong with the other side.

But emerging leaders should practice something different.

When the evidence points toward us, resist the temptation to point elsewhere.

Target it. Own it. Then proceed to do something about it.

Because sometimes the shortest route to becoming a better leader begins with two simple words: “That’s mine.”

Millennial Moment

by Gloria B. Caldwell

Walking on Eggshells ...

I used to walk on eggshells with my own life ...

Tipping around delicately. Not wanting to hurt my own feelings. Not wanting to disturb the relationships I had with parents, siblings, cousins, friends.

So I tipped around. Not too big. Not too loud. Not too successful. Because deep down, I knew — if I moved in that direction, somebody was going to call me back. Tell me what I wasn’t capable of. Based on my history. My past. What they thought they knew about me.

So I walked delicately. Handling everybody else’s thoughts, their ideas, their feelings, their attitudes — while I stomped down my own dreams, my own goals, my own success, my own freedom.

Is it worth it? Walking on eggshells with the one life God gave you?

He didn’t make you fragile. He gave you ten toes and two feet to walk the path He set in front of you — in strength, in power, by His grace, according to His plan. Boldly. Not delicately.

I no longer choose to walk on eggshells. Don’t you do it either.

God loves you, and so do I. He’s given you a gift; open it.

Rosetta James Foundation "Spotlight on Our Elders" ... Featuring

Mrs. Alice Sams

Mrs. Alice Friend Sams was born in Madison County, Ala., where she attended public schools before earning undergraduate and MBA degrees from Alabama A&M University.

A graduate of the coveted Leadership Huntsville Madison County program in 2000, Sams serves as program director for Project FOCUS (Former Offenders Changing for Unconditional Success) under the auspices of the Madison County Commission District Six. In that capacity, since 2009 she has assisted with job and housing placement, GED preparation, restoration of voting rights and pardons from the State Pardon and Parole Board. With partners, Project FOCUS provides workshops on anger management, financial stability, life skills, and counseling.

Sams is also a retiree of NASA Marshall Space Flight Center, where she served for 25 years as contract specialist from 1982-2007. At NASA, she was chiefly responsible for soliciting bids and proposals, selecting vendors, negotiating, evaluating budgets and personnel assignment, which resulted in the awarding of purchase orders, grants and multi-million dollar contracts in support of space and missile systems.

Her diverse career also includes 12 years of teaching middle and high school students, preparing lesson plans, using innovative instructional methods to improve student's functional academic levels, reporting to local and state educational offices and evaluating students at the beginning and end of each year. Sams also served as a liaison between the school and the Richland County Education Association. Sams is no doubt known equally as well for her significant community involvement and civic engagement with various organizations and boards. She worked closely with the Commissioner, Judge U. W. Clemon and the community on the Desegregation Consent Order with the Huntsville City Schools and Madison County Schools and helped prepare budgets with the state and NAACP offices and the Von Braun Lions Club.

National AAMU Conference Explores AI Future

Alabama A&M University continued to expand its role in artificial intelligence education and workforce development by hosting its second Generative AI Boot Camp, bringing approximately 180 educators, researchers, institutional leaders and information technology professionals together to explore the next frontier of AI: autonomous agents.

The two-day Agentic AI Boot Camp was presented in partnership with the Alliance for AI Transformation, Amazon Web Services (AWS) and AWS Machine Learning University. Participants represented educational institutions from across the country, with a particular focus on historically Black colleges and universities, minority-serving institutions and community colleges.

The program built on AAMU's first Generative AI Boot Camp, held in June, while moving participants deeper into the rapidly evolving field of agentic AI. Unlike traditional generative AI systems that primarily respond to prompts, AI agents can be designed to reason, plan and carry out tasks with varying levels of autonomy.

Through guided labs, real-world use cases and collaborative problem-solving, participants learned to design, deploy and evaluate AI agents using AWS tools and frameworks. Sessions also addressed responsible AI practices, scalability and ways institutions can incorporate the technology into teaching, research and operations.

"Alabama A&M has made AI a major priority for our University, and the boot camps have helped to support the AI initiatives launched by our president, Dr. Daniel K. Wims, about two years ago," said Dr. Majed El-Dweik, AAMU vice president of Research and Economic Development.

AAMU is one of five regional lead institutions for AWS Machine Learning University, a designation that expands access to AI and machine learning training, curriculum and collaborative learning opportunities.

AUNT IRMA MAKES IT PLAIN ...

A Little Filler on the Empty Pews

Aunt Irma says the young folks didn't necessarily leave God—they left the building.

There was a time when joining a church was almost part of becoming a grown-up. You finished school, got a job, got married, bought a little house, had some babies and found yourself a church home. Mama belonged. Daddy belonged. Big Mama practically had her name engraved on the third pew. So you belonged, too.

But these younger generations are asking questions their grandparents often didn't ask. Why should I join? What does this church actually do? Does it help anybody besides itself? Do the people inside practice on Monday what they shout about on Sunday?

And sometimes they don't like the answers.

They have watched churches argue over politics, money, sexuality, race, titles, buildings, parking spaces and who gets to sit in the big chair. Some have seen enormous sanctuaries surrounded by neighborhoods filled with poverty. Others have heard plenty about judgment but precious little about mercy.

So they haven't necessarily stopped praying. They haven't necessarily stopped believing in something greater than themselves. Many simply decided they could talk to God from the kitchen table, on a hiking trail or while driving to work without putting on Sunday clothes and sitting through two hours of church.

That ought to worry us.

Because if young people stop believing in God, the Church has a theological problem. But if they still believe in God and simply stop believing in us, the Church has a credibility problem.

And Aunt Irma says you can't fix a credibility
